Geography 2012-2013 CATALOG

If you're from Michigan, you probably know how to use your hand as a map. Just point to the part where you're from and people know what you mean. But geography can involve a lot more than knowing where places are located on a map, a globe or even your hand. It can involve climates, cultures, ecology, economics, population studies and more. Our courses range from those that examine human impact on the natural environment to those that study water resources and economic policies in different places. The world is rich with variety. Cut yourself in on the wealth.

WHY CHOOSE A COURSE IN GEOGRAPHY?

Because...

- You dream of faraway places.
- You want to understand relationships between people and the places in which they live.
- You want to broaden your perspective on the world.
- You want credits that may count toward your associate degree.
- You want to earn credits that may transfer toward a four-year degree.

Geography courses are identified by the prefix GEOG.
